EVERY FRIDAY.

A WEEK ago Henry Smith, a big, burly negro, enticed a four-year-old white child from her home at Paris, Texas, and after ravishing her tore her body in twain. A mob started out in pursuit when the awful news was spread and Wednesday it succeeded in capturing his crime, where 10,000 people had gath- bite, though the odds are bound to be ered to meet out punishment to him. It was decided to burn him alive and then not grow fat and wealthy. followed a scene that would put the days of the Spanish Inquisition to blush. The negro was mounted on a carnival float in mockery of a king on his throne and driven through the principal streets to the place of execution, where he was placed on a scaffold six feet square and ten feet high and in view of all beholders. With fiendish cruelty the mob tortured him with red-hot irons, beginning at his feet and searing his body all over till his face was reached and his eyes burned out. Then, although apparently dead, coal oil was poured on him and cotton seed hulls put under him and set on fire. It did not take long for the flames to reduce the mass to ashes and a fearful crime was fearfully avenged. It is hard to realize, however, that civilized people of the 19th century could have been guilty of such savage c.uelty. The negro deserved death, but two wrongs do not make a right, and such exhibitions are a disgrace to the community which makes or permits them.

THE fourth-class republican post-masters, who are resigning for pecuniary considerations or otherwise, and recommending democrats for their places, need not be so previous. The post-office department has decided not to accept such resignations, except in extreme cases. There will be plenty of democrats found to fill the offices after the 4th of March and they will be of a better class than those recommended by republicans, about whom their will always be a suspicion of dislovalty.

is how I am to account to Miss Leslie for my extraordinary behavior. As I fully intend asking her to be my wife in January next I must manage to find some reason which won't sound hopelessly inadequate for taking no notice of her between now and then."

"That's easily done. Go to Persia, or China, or Japan, or some such place. Parliament will be up in a week or two. and you won't be wanted again before February, so that you will be quite free to leave the country. Tell her you want to study the working of the Chinese constitution, or that you are anxious to pick up some specimens of ancient Japanese art before the last of them is sold.

"Yes," agreed Thorold gloomily. "! suppose that is what I shall have to say. I should think there was very little chance of her believing me, though."

Lord Guise shrugged his shoulders. "Oh, I dare say she won't quite believe you," he admitted; "but that, as I told you before, is entirely your own fault. You ought to have consulted us before you gave her to understand that you loved her."

Strictly speaking, Percy had not gone quite so far as that; still he had gone far enough to give his abrupt retreat a very ugly look, and it was with shame as well as grief in his heart that he set forth on the ensuing Wednesday afternoon to keep the appointment he had made with Miss Leslie. Now in making that appointment it had occurred to him that Mrs. Leslie would be terribly in his way, and he had wondered how he should contrive to get her out of the room just for a few minutes; but now he desired nothing more ardently than the presence of this third person, because, of course, what he had to say could be much more easily said to the two ladies together than to one of them

Surely, however, he might have known better than to imagine that no chance of speaking a private word to Dorothy would be given him. Mothers who give such chances are usually sneered at; yet how can the poor things help themselves? grimly,"though some people might think If we ourselves were mothers, and if we had reason to suppose that a young man of large means and excellent character desired to say something particular to a daughter of ours, and if there was but one occasion left on which he could say it, what should we do? That is true fact—that love, more than any other of enough, I suppose; but at any rate I have the passions to which we are subject, is increased by being thwarted. Never before had Dorothy seemed to him so Lord Guise lighted a fresh cigar, tuck- charming; never before had he felt in the same degree the impossiblity of saying even the most commonplace thing "My dear fellow," he replied, "I will to her without letting her see how he adored her. He could not help noticing that I started this society with a special that her color was a little brighter than usual, that her speech was somewhat quicker, and that there was a suspicion of nervousness in her manner. It was beyond a doubt that she had guessed the original object of his visit, and flesh and blood could hardly withstand the true position of affairs. However, he was an honorable man, and he knew that he must not dally with that temptation. To place himself beyond reach of it he said rather suddenly:

And then, you know, there is one great advantage of going far away, which is the intense delight of returning to one's friends.' But of course he could not better his position by such speeches as that. Say what he would, the facts remained that he had paid marked attention to this boy, mamma, and oh, he was so glad to girl; that he had begged a flower from her on the occasion of their last meeting, and that he had made an appointment with her for the ostensible purpose of saying good-by to her, and the unmistakable purpose of saying something else. Now, apparently, he had nothing At the close of a long prayer by fath- to tell her except that he meant to run away, and that he was a good deal ashamed of running away. Whether she loved him, or hated him, or did not care a brass farthing about him, such conduct must inevitably strike her as contemptible. And that it did so strike her the unfortunate man perceived plainly enough, although she said nothing worse to him than:

"I can't imagine any delight being exactly 'intense' to you; you would always be thinking of the reverse side of the shield, even though you couldn't see

"Indeed you are quite wrong!" he protested warmly. "Very likely I do keep rather too watchful an eye upon the seamy side of most things; but that only gives me a keener joy in the things which have no seamy side. And one of those things," he ventured to add, "would be a visit to Westmoreland. Will you be there the whole of next winter, do you think? In the month of January, for instance?"

"I really don't know; but we live there and we don't often leave home.' answered Dorothy.

"So that if I were to turn up at that time-if I happened to be staying for a few days with my cousin, Sybil Belyoir -I might hope to find you in the neighborhood? I don't see why I shouldn't invite myself to stay with Sybil when I return," he continued musingly. Then something that he saw in Dorothy's face prompted him to add, "She and I are nothing more than friends and cousins now, and I am sure that she is quite as glad of that as I am."

Miss Leslie made no rejoinder. but presently she asked him whether he would have another cup of tea, and or his declining moved into the front room. whither he followed her perforce. The old lady, who may have had intelligence enough to surmise why her company had been desired, and why her room would now be more welcome, rose at once to depart, and after she had gone poor Percy had to pass through an uncomfortable five minutes. Mrs. Leslie was a simple, honest sort of woman, and as the news which her daughter imparted to her so calmly filled her with consternation it was quite out of her power to conceal what she felt.

She said, "Oh, indeed!" and then remained absolutely silent while her visitor explained somewhat confusedly that he required a change, and that it was the fashion to go round the world now, and so forth; but when he reached the point of saying that he should try to be in Westmoreland in six months' time she could not refrain from giving him a tolerably direct snub.

"We do not see much of Lady Belvoir's friends," said she. "Lady Belvoir scarcely visits at all in the country, and I should not, in any case, care very much about that kind of society. Besides, I am not at all sure that we shall be at home in January. I should be glad to escape the long winter, and we may very possibly move south when the cold weather sets in."

"And if you do go south where will you go?" asked Percy, who felt that he could not afford to accept a snub.

"That is quite uncertain. Dorothy, you see what the time is?"

After that Percy could only take himself off as speedily as possible. Mrs. Leslie's method of showing displeasure was lacking in grace and dignity, but she had every right to be displeased and he had none to resent the very chilling accents in which she bade him farewell. Dorothy, if less undisguisedly angry, was scarcely less cold, and the impression which he took away with him was that his chance of ever being forgiven was small indeed.

Carlton House terrace was perhaps rather an odd place to go in search of consolation; nevertheless it was to Carlton House terrace that he betook himself straightway. His cousin was the only person, except Lord Guise, to whom he could confide even a portion of his woes, and he remembered that she had more than once displayed a good natured sort of interest in this second love affair of his.

Lady Belvoir was at home, and the speech with which she received him was a welcome one to his ears, because it enabled him to plunge without preface into his subject.

"Have you come to ask for my blessing?" she inquired. "I heard that you were expected in Ebury street this afternoon, and I am so extraordinarily clever that I can guess what errand took you there."

"You are very clever," he replied; "but like other clever people you sometimes make a bad shot. I went to Ebury street to say good-by. The fact is that I have made up my mind to take a trip round the world, and I suppose I shall hardly be back before the beginning of next year."

"Dear me!" said Lady Belvoir. "And what do you mean by that, pray?" "Oh, I don't know; nothing in particular. I want to see Bombay and Calcutta and Yokohama and-and all the other horrid places that people talk about." "You look as if you did. And I wonder why you wanted to begin by seeing me, and I wonder what you think I can do for you, and I wonder whether Dorothy has refused you or whether you only concluded for some insufficient reason or other that she would refuse you if you asked her?" "Well, she hasn't refused me, and I haven't asked her, and I'm sure I don't know what the consequences of my asking would have been," said Percy, laughing a little. "As to what you can do for me, I think that if you were very good natured and kind you might give abominable?" This was a very natural and excusa ble question; but of course it was not in Percy's power to make any reply to it. After a moment of hesitation he said:

"I have reasons, but I am afraid I can't tell you anything about them, except that they aren't discreditable or dishonorable reasons."

"One is relieved to hear that," ob served Lady Belvoir, with a twinkle in her eye. "One has acquired—quite Democratic Thousands N.W. Norfolk: Western R.R. distrust even the best behaved of them. However, my faith in you knows no bounds; so that I am willing to take your word for it that you are going away because you think you ought to see Yokohama. The only thing is, do you really imagine that Dorothy Leslie is the kind of girl to wait meekly until you come back, and to drop a curtsy when you are graciously pleased to offer her your hand and what remains of your heart?" "Ah, that's just it! You know, Sybil, you have treated me rather badly, haven't you?"

"So you have always said, and you are one of those people who are always right. How can I make amends? Shall we renew our engagement?"

"No, thank you; I shouldn't like that; nor would you. But although you certainly did treat me badly I don't believe you are altogether heartless, Sybil."

"This is indeed gross flattery!" ex-claimed Lady Belvoir. "What can he be going to ask for?"

"Not for any very enormous favor. What I was thinking was this: You may feel that you owe me a good turn, and it wouldn't give you a great deal of trouble to write to me once or twice while I am away And couldn't you, perhaps, just put in a word for me sometimes, when you saw your opportunity? Owing to circumstances which I can't at present explain it will be impossible for me to say a word for myself."

"I see. I am to hold the fort for you. and I am to keep on repeating, 'He will return; I know him well.' But what if you don't return, my good friend? What if you meet with some enchanting creature on board one of the many steamers in which you will have to take a passage and forget the poor maid of Westmore-

"You know I shall not do that." "Do I? If I do it's all I know about your mysterious disappearance. Now, look here, Percy, as I told you before, I have a childlike faith in you; I may say that you are the only perfectly honest man whom I have ever known. But if I undertake this job it must be upon the distinct understanding that I am to be enlightened eventually as to the whole meaning of it. I rather think that I can smell a rat; still I am not sure, and I must be made sure, or I shall die of baffled curiosity."

"It will give me the greatest possible pleasure," answered Percy gratefully, "to tell you all about it as soon as I am at liberty to do so. And do you think, Sybil-candidly now-do you think that there is any hope of my being pardoned? I don't mind confessing to you that ! went rather farther than I ought to have done, and I know Mrs. Leslie is furious with me. One can't blame her."

"Oh, you goose!" exclaimed Lady Belvoir, laughing, "what signifies Mrs. Leslie's fury? Don't you understand that dear, didn't you say that you wanted me if you want to be pardoned by a woman to go to some shops with you? And do all you have to do is to make her love ou? After that she will pardon any thing and everything. More fool she, no donbt; but we are made like that." "Are you made like that?" asked Percy wonderingly. "Would you mind going away now? I am about to hold an interesting and af-

Harper's Weekly is acknowledged as standing first among illustrated weekly periodicals in America. It occupies a place between that of the hurried daily paper and that of the less timely monthly magazine. It includes both literature and news, and presents with equal force and felicity the real events of current history and the imaginative themes of fiction. On account of its very complete series of illustrations of the World's Fair, it will be not only the best guide to the great Exposition, but also its best souvenir. Every public event of general interest will be fully illustrated in its pages. Its contributions being from the best writers and artists in this country, it will continue to excel in literature, news and illustrations, all other publications of its class.

WORK FOR WOMEN.

HOW NEW FIELDS OF EMPLOYMENT HAVE BEEN OPENED.

The Veteran Virginia Penny Relates Her Experiences in Seeking Occupations for Women-She Devoted Time and Fortune to Assist Women to Support Themselves. [Copyright, 1803, by American Press Associa-

I had been a teacher for over nine years, mostly in the western states. While teaching my health failed, and I thought I would go at something else. But when I came to study the matter carefully I found no other avenue was open to me. I asked myself why it was that men had so many occupations and women so few. I could not solve the problem, and the more I studied it the

VIRGINIA PENNY IN 1859.

I read works on political economy, labor and capital and similar objects. I bought every book to be had on women's deportment, duties and spheres. But nowhere could I gain information of pursuits that women could enter and earn a livelihood, for no such printed information had been given to the world. So I determined to learn by observation and from personal inquiry what I wanted. To do so I must go to the places where men and women were at work. I usually rode and waiked from 8 o'clock in the morning until places of business closed and reached my boarding place about dark. There were then no elevators in buildings, and I and my hired companion, for I always employed one, climbed up stairs, geterally to the ninth, tenth and eleventa floors, all day long, week after week, month after month and year after year.

I visited between 5,000 and 6,000 places in Philadelphia, New York city, Boston and the surrounding towns. My object was to see the mode of operating, ascertain the wages paid, the time of learning, the effects of occupations on the health and many other things of a kindred nature. The one and only aim in view was to gain a knowledge of what employments were feasible to women, the qualifications needed and the pursuits to which they were best adapted; also the likelihood of gaining a footing in various occupations, the probable result pecuniarily, the length of time to prepare and the expense of living while doing so, with some inquiry into the cost of tools or the capital required for carrying on the business, if carried on independently. I found the majority of pursuits followed by men were capable of being performed by women.

The size and character of the places visited ranged from the mammoth buildings of the Harpers to the lone attic, where a maker of spectacle frames worked alone and lived with his motherless two-year-old child. I have gone to places ranging in variety from a shot tower to a cobbler's workbench in a basement.

I here take this opportunity to acknowledge the uniform kindness and courtesy I received from employers and employed wherever I went. Not a rude word, not a coarse look, did I ever have from one of the thousands of men and women I saw. Perhaps such changes have taken place that none will rememmay recall me to the minds of a few employers or employees.

The results of my four years' labor were embodied in a volume entitled "The Employments of Women," afterward published as "Five Hundred Employments Adapted to Women," and still later as "How Women Can Make fork?" I said a toasting fork would do, Money." The second book, kindred in nature, but not statistical, was called

"Think and Act." My first active work was commenced in Philadelphia. I recall with pleasure my trips through many of the large establishments in that city. I was shown through Power & Weightman's laboratory and permitted to talk with the em-Howells' wall paper factory, through feminine vote.

Lippincott's bookmaking establishment and a pleasant chat with Mr. Lippincott.

Some friends and myself made a visit to Rembrandt Peale's home, where we found the artist working on the sixtyfirst original portrait of Washington, An intelligent guide conducted us through the mint. I had a delightful talk with George W. Childs, who wrote to me in 1886 as follows: "It might be found that in the numerous magazines devoting some columns to women's interests the contributions of such a pioneer as yourself in the statistical and suggestive histories of employments would be welcome. The sketch in 'Allibone's Dictionary' does only justice to you as the first encyclopedist on the subject of women's occupations,"

From Philadelphia I went to New York city. There most business streets have each their peculiar line of work. Many prominent men I there had occasion to talk with have gone to their long homes, Greeley, Raymond, Bryant, Leslie and the Brooks, among editors. With a note from Miss Emily Howland I called upon Cyrus Field, who greatly favored women as telegraph operators, and whose parlors, dining room and hall were frescoed by a woman artist.

Among the many places of the bookmaking kind that come to mind are Harper's, the Appletons, the Bible house, the Methodist Book concern and the Tract society. Many women were employed in them. I consumed much time in visiting cotton, linen, woolen and silk manufactories, and others of metal and glass were gone through. Those of the precious metals were especially interesting, as watch chains, rings, and bracelets. Cameo cutters and lapidaries were not passed by. I visited the Cooper institute, where quite a number of ladies were practicing the art of wood engraving, and some were painting portraits and landscapes.

I talked with many salesladies. The hours were long and the pay poor of the majority of them. Two of the few avocations then open to women were millinery and dressmaking, and they were crowded to excess. Hundreds of seamstresses made gentlemen's and ladies' underwear at starvation rates. Book agents plied their vocation with persistent zeal. Button factories employed a number of women, and so did knitting factories. There were immense bread and cracker bakeries, but no women were employed. However, one woman had grown rich making and selling pies. The hardest, filthiest and worst paid labor in most occupations was usually done by women.

From New York I went over to Bos ton and visited numberless stores, factories and workshops.

You see, the empire dress was becoming to very few women after all. Short women couldn't wear it, and very tall women were not graceful in it. Besides, it wasn't a practical dress for anything but house and carriage wear. It needed most careful manipulation not to be grotesque and a repose of manner and deliberation in movement which the American women are not supremely gifted with. #### GOING WEST TO DIE.

Well, here we are, my dear old wife, on board the train at last! Our little all is packed in a trunk, with lock and straps made fast.

hear the bell a-ringin', and the whistle's piercin' cry; There, wife, we're movin' out of the town!-we're goin' West to die!

We've been from Jane's to John's house, from John's house back to Jane, Till now they've laid their burdens down on board this Western train; 'Tis rather hard to send us off all crippled up and gray.

To find a place on which to die, two thousand miles away. Since we broke up a-keepin' house, they've carted us around,

Till now, it seems, a home for us on gearth can not be found. As sure as this old face of mine can ne'er loo young again, So sure we'll never more return to trouble John or lane. They send us to a stranger land, o'er an untraveled road.

That Mary, in her Western home, may bear the heavy load; It isn't to be wondered at that my eyes are filled with tears, of years.

I didn't think 'twould come to this-I didn't mean it should-No home is like your own home, though made of logs and wood: No bread is sweet when eating it 'mid bitterness and strife: Few care to fill with peace and joy, an old man's closing life.

Now o'er a long, untraveled road we seek a stran ger land-The old home circle broken up at cruel time's command: But this cannot destroy our love, 'tis stronger nov than when Our heads were not the silver locks of three-score years and ten. Since we broke up a keepin' house we've led wretched life: Jane put the blame upon her man, and John upon

nis wife; der years

When we toiled day and night for them and wiped their flowing tears. We leave behind us all the scenes of early years, dear wife. And all the friends with whom we've won the victories of life,

We leave behind the little church, where oft we've knelt in prayer; But, good wife, we will never leave the God that used to meet us there.

Although these eyes are growing dim, still I can see to read The precious truths in God's own Word, that children all should heed; "Honor thy father," saith the Lord-"thy mother honor too; Then shalt thou live long in the land that God hath given to you." Our latest days will dawn ere long-our journey's end is nigh-

We're goin' West, to Mary's home, we're goin' West to die; Then He Who sees the sparrow fall, Who counts the ocean's sands.

Will take us to the better home-the house not built with hands. "When the grass is green above us,

And they who know us and who love us Are sleeping by our side,

Will it avail us aught that men Tell the world with lip and pen That we have lived and died?"

(Printed in loving memory of a devoted and true vite, from her own selections.)

The Scientific American gives this recipe which the whole world ought to know: At the first indication of the approach of dipththeria in the throat of a around the Mardi Gras festival of New child, make the room close, then take a Orleans. The play will be called "New tin cup and pour into it a quantity of tar and turpentine, equal parts. Then hold the cup over a fire, so as to fill the room with fumes. The little patient, on inhaling the fumes, will cough up and spit out all the membranous matter, and the diphtheria will pass out. The fumes of the tar and turpentine loosen the matter in the throat, and thus afford the relief that has baffled the skill of physicians.

A husband gave his wife a neat little account book, prettily bound and designed to be inviting in appearance. He also gave her $50 and said: "I want you to put down what I give you on this side and on the other write down the way it goes, and in a fortnight I will give you another supply." Two weeks later he asked for the book, "On, I have kept that account," said the young matron. "Here it is." And on one side was inscribed: "Received from Algy $50," and on the opposite was this summary: "Spent it all."

The line penetrated his land a distance of two miles. In return for his liberality the road named a station for him, and gave him a life pass over its line. His last public act was the laying of the corner-stone of the Baptist Church at Red House in that county, to which he was the largest donor.

Joseph V.
